Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from A Tabloid: A Tragic Farce Scene. - Sherwood s chambers. Handsomely furnished room. Door to hall L. of back, with outer door seen beyond it. Table C. littered with writing materials. Reading lamp on it. Easy chair R. of table, other chair L. of it. Sideboard C. of back, bearing decanter, syphons and glasses. Time. - Close on midnight. As curtain rises, enter L.C. Sherwood, a handsome man of about 40, followed by Knight, slightly younger. Both are in evening dress, with overcoats and opera hats. Sherwood turns on the light. Sherwood. Well, here we are. Whats the time? Knight. Nearly twelve. The very witching hour, what? Sherwood. Humph! One advantage of our English habits is that you get home in time to do a bit of work before turning in. Have a whisky? Knight. No thanks. Don t know why I came up this extra flight of stairs. Must be toddling down again to my own room now. Sherwood. Rot. I don t really want to start writing straight off. Knight. Then you ought...
