He began to use his pencils and brushes almost as soon as he was able to hold them, and when in 1902 he went abroad to study, his individuality as a painter was already marked. After an academic year at Munich he went to Paris; there his pictures were exhibited at the Salon; there he received recognition, and there, too, he would probably have remained had not the waves of war sent him back to his native land. Since his return he has done some of his finest work in painting American, particularly New York and Chicago, scenes. His pictures have been exhibited at Indianapolis, where the discerning ones were quick to recognize his genius. He has chosen a studio on Twenty-third Street, where he satisfies the great passion of his life--which is work. HE WEIRDEST SCULPTURED LION IN CAPTIVITY BY FRANK OWEN...
